

CERRILLOS MAY BE AGAIN A LIVELY MINING CAMP

Believed Sunset Company Will Operate Old Smelter; Big Development of Properties Is Expected.

Special Correspondence to the Herald

The Sunspot mine has been closed since last fall by the New Mexico State Water Conservation Board. It was believed that the water would be available for some time, but the water company has now cut off the water supply, so that it will not be put into operation again, at least not in the current report. While another has been made for the state of New Mexico, but has recently been denied by the Sunset Mining and Development company, which has offices in Albuquerque and is engaged in development and extension work in the Bell Canyon district. President E. P. Staley of this company has been on the ground for several weeks, and Tuesday was joined by an expert from El Paso. Mr. Staley is very nervous about the work which his company proposes to do, but promises full information in two weeks. He decided to discuss the matter from a point of view, whatever, but it is understood upon good authority that the railroad company is again to put the track leading from the mine line to the center of the mine of Sunspot if it is thought that cars would be used for mining.

The smelter is a silver-lead concentrator.

Much new material has been shipped in recently for the Gandy Queen, including a six engine to run the compressor and several new air drifts. This property is owned by the American and New Mexico Mining company. The Santa Fe, which has been in continuous operation for four years or more past, will complete its work Saturday at the latest, and will then close down. This industry employed 45 men and a number of teams. It is thought that the industry will be moved to another large hill west of town, where a better quality of rock can be found, and will be in operation.
